Get Back

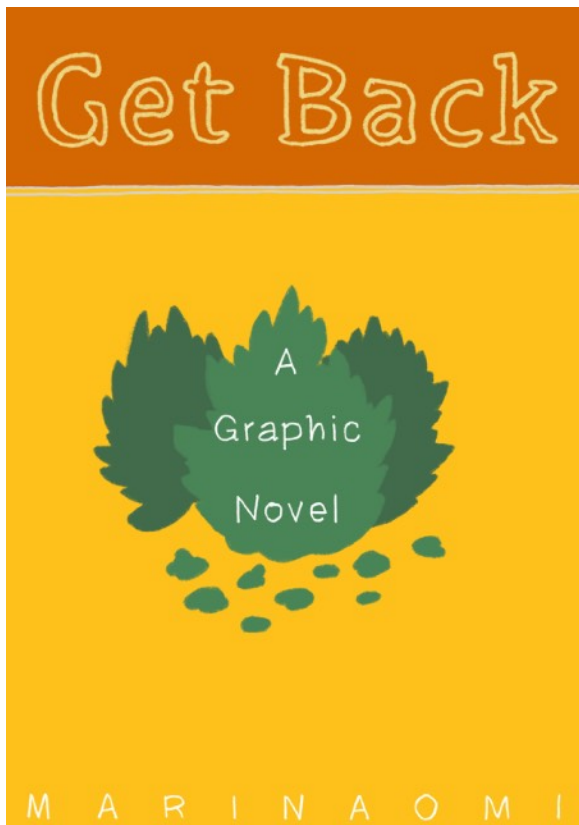

MariNaomi

4-color • 245 pages

Hana Ito takes a week away from her loveless marriage to clean out her beloved Aunt June's house. Once the famous inventor of the Nostalgic Meditation Technique (NMT), a therapeutic way to re-experience one's memories, June now lies comatose and terminally ill in the hospital.

As Hana uncovers her and June's complicated history, she is driven to attempt NMT to revisit her unrequited teen crush, Teri. Much to her surprise, not only does NMT work, it sometimes results in brief episodes of time travel. If Hana can control this, she can finally profess her love to Teri and change the past, preventing Teri's suicide and living happily ever after.

But changing the past calls into question what is real and what is imagined, the accuracy of memories, and what memories become after they are changed. The twist ending digs sharply into one of humanity's greatest fears and tugs on the heart in MariNaomi's signature fashion.

A speculative queer love story blending Memento, Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind, and Syd Barrett.

MariNaomi is an Eisner-nominated cartoonist whose work has appeared in over eighty print publications worldwide including The New Yorker, The New York Times, Vogue Japan, Buzzfeed, PEN America, The Advocate, Nerds of Color, and Russia's first LGBTQ comics anthology. Their work has exhibited in the Smithsonian, the Cartoon Art Museum, the Asian Art Museum, and the Japanese American Museum. The Secret Voice

Zack Soto

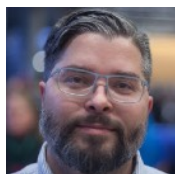

Warrior-monk Doctor Galapagos must unite the realms of magic and man in a last-ditch effort to stop the Smog Emperor while battling an unknown psychic menace.

"This richly imagined fantasy epic follows the mysterious Doctor Galapagos...kicking off what promises to be an excitingly original adventure." - Library Journal

"The scope here is not unlike Lord of the Rings: Vast battles, cities under siege, huge armies of monsters, and a desperate defense. His fusion of genre tropes and alt-comics storytelling has been the model for this kind of comic for quite some time." - The Comics Journal

Doctor Galapagos, famed warrior-monk and agent of the Red College, is on a desperate mission to unite the realms of magic and man in a last-ditch effort to stop the seemingly invincible forces of the Smog Emperor. But the good Doctor carries a secret. An unseen and unknown psychic menace eats away at his very soul and threatens to jeopardize his mission... and the world itself. Can the Red College turn the tide? Can Doctor Galapagos stay true to himself, hold on to his love, and defeat the Smog Emperor all at once?

Zack Soto lives in Portland, Oregon with his wife and their son. He is an acquiring editor for Toon Books, the publisher of Study Group Comic Books, co-editor of Study Group magazine, and co-host of the Process Party podcast.

Adult Nonfiction - Graphic Journalism

limited palette hardcover • 268 pages

“This searing, beautifully rendered meditation on gun culture in the United States is fast moving, fascinating, and heartbreaking.” - Dave Isay, founder of StoryCorps

“As gun violence continues unabated across the U.S., this book finally demystifies how we got here.” - Frank Smyth, author of *The NRA: The Unauthorized History

“A vital contribution to the comics journalism canon: thoughtful, heartbreaking, and beautifully drawn.” - Joel Christian Gill, co-author of *Stamped from the Beginning

“A bitterly beautiful book. Required reading, for the indelibly illustrated stories of lives lost and for how it dispels so much of what we think we know about America’s history with guns.” - Badiucao and Melissa Chan, authors of *You Must Take Part in Revolution

A work of comics journalism around the stories of kids who have died in the U.S. due to gun violence or gun negligence—the leading cause of death for minors since 2020, and dispelling myths of the history of gun culture in the U.S.

Who have we lost? How did we get here? Why do gun-lovers love their guns? These are the questions that people across America ask every time another news story broadcasts a death from gun violence.

With compassionate, thoughtful journalism, this graphic novel explores the lives of five kids and the guns that ended their lives: from incidents of gang violence to school shootings to suicide. These tragedies are presented alongside the history of gun culture and legislation, discussing the NRA, the legal system, and the racial imbalances in American gun violence.

Turning Japanese

Adult Nonfiction - Graphic Memoir

B&W hardcover • 236 pages

"The best comic about being Asian American in Japan. Like Fun Home and Persepolis, Turning Japanese is at once modest and grand. MariNaomi is a master of the small, intimate moments that build to a surprisingly emotional climax." - Jason Shiga, Ignatz and Eisner Award-winning cartoonist

"Mari's portrait-of-an-artist-as-a-culturally-'nebulous'-young-woman is a vulnerable, searching, raw record. Exploring the meaning of 'hapa' on both sides of the world doesn't always result in easy answers, and the need for translation—not just of language—proves to be ongoing. May the illuminating journeys continue." - Smithsonian APA Center

Following a traumatic breakup, the loss of her job, and a move to another city, 22 year old, half-Japanese Mari finds herself with the perfect opportunity to explore her Japanese roots, previously forbidden by her mother in an effort to assimilate.

Mari gets a job at an illegal hostess bar in Silicon Valley, determined to learn the language from its clientele, randy Japanese businessmen. She then embarks on a three-month adventure working as a hostess in Tokyo's Ginza District and meets up with her grandparents in Fukuoka with the goal of speaking to them for the first time in her life without a translator to edit and censor. Though she is somewhat successful in learning the language, her cultural education and whirlwind engagement to a young man are not at all what she expected as a young feminist.

Turning Japanese is a story about otherness, culture clashes, generation gaps, and youthful impetuosity.

MariNaomi is an Eisner-nominated cartoonist whose work has appeared in over eighty print publications worldwide including The New Yorker, The New York Times, Vogue Japan, Buzzfeed, PEN America, The Advocate, Nerds of Color, and Russia's first LGBTQ comics anthology. "Innovative...captivating...equal parts wistful and skeptical, wise and all too human." - Publishers Weekly, Starred Review ★

"Dazzling in theme, story, and visuals, I Thought You Loved Me is a standout graphic memoir." - Foreword, Starred Review ★

"A visual feast...ideal for anyone who remembers the betrayal of losing your best friend but still knows that we all grow and change—so the future holds hope." - Booklist

"A tremendous achievement, a penetrating exploration of memory and relationships and the messiness of living with a changing self and other changing selves...I've never read anything else quite like this." - Steph Cha, author of *Your House Will Pay

Jodie was Mari's best friend through their teens and twenties, and Mari can barely remember her. As young Mari began to explore her identity as a bisexual, biracial woman in a rich, white town, Jodie was a constant confidant, even kissing Mari out of the closet. The two were inseparable as they sought to gain a foothold on life and love as young feminists, Jodie an entrepreneurial sex worker and Mari in the boys' club of video game development in the late '90s. Then, suddenly and mysteriously, the relationship ended in fierce animosity.

Through journal excerpts, letters, conversations with friends, and cross-country travel, Mari pieces together lost memories and a lost friendship, eventually reuniting with Jodie 20 years later.

I Thought You Loved Me is for any woman who made mistakes in her 20s, drifted apart from her friends in her 30s, and is feeling betrayed by her memories as she approaches 40. Packed with book-club-ready talking points, it is for anyone who has felt ghosted and haunted by a dear friend and othered by the straight, white patriarchy.

“A heartfelt and accessible coming-of-age story about finding and understanding one’s place in the world.”- Jim Ottaviani, #1 New York Times bestselling author

“Gorgeously done...one that everyone should read” - YA Books Central

“The book conveys complex concepts in an accessible way and will appeal to readers who are curious about the origins of Buddhism...Vividly rendered.” - Kirkus

A spirited young prince longing to learn more about the world grows into a man on a quest to find the cause of human suffering in this first-of-its-kind graphic novel retelling of the life of Siddhartha, the founder of Buddhism.

Prince Siddhartha lives in a beautiful palace in the heart of Kapilavastu. His father, the king, ensures that he has the best of everything—he just can’t go outside. He is locked up away from the city, away from anything that might cause him pain. He knows nothing of illness, aging, sorrow, or death, yet Siddhartha feels the pain regardless, and it instills a burning curiosity to understand the world outside—and the nature of human suffering.

Based on the life of the real man who was known first as a prince, then as a monk, and now as the Gautama Buddha, Enlightened is about one boy’s quest to learn the truth that underpins our endless struggle against suffering—and in understanding, break the cyclic existence that perpetuates it.

Sachi Ediriweera is a designer, filmmaker, and comic book artist. He is the writer and artist of the graphic novel Lionborn, which was the first English language graphic novel produced in Sri Lanka. His acclaimed short films have screened in numerous film festivals around the world. When he’s not drawing or writing his third-act plot twist, Sachi enjoys reading art books and comics, eating pizza, and overthinking cosplay ideas for comic cons. He divides his time between Colombo, Sri Lanka, and Dubai.
